

GALLIED BY GUILLAUX.

The large bunch of spectators who were standing on a mullock heap to obtain a cheap snatch view of M. Guillaux's exhibition at the Miners' Racecourse at Ballarat on Saturday afternoon, were rather unexpectedly and unceremoniously disturbed by the aviator towards the end of his first flight. M. Guillaux took a sweep downwards, and came within fifteen feet of the heads of the on-lookers, who thought that their doom was imminent. The spectators on the hill scattered in all directions, and one portly individual who attempted to run down the heap fell down and rolled to the bottom. In the rush to get away from their seemingly safe position, two women and several children fainted, but they soon recovered. The mullock heap crowd will not quickly forget Guillaux's flight in Ballarat.
